MEChA requests Union name change

Andi Anderson
DAILY STAFF WRITER

The Caesar Chavez Student Union?

It is a possibility if a San Jose State University naming committee approves a request made by Movimiento Estudiantil Chicano de Aztlan (MEChA) to change the name of the Student Union to the Caesar Chavez Student Union.

A referendum about the name change will also be put to a vote by SJSU students in the March Associated Students elections.

Although the outcome of the vote might have some influence on the committee's decision, technically, the referendum should not impact the process of the naming committee, said Gabe Reyes, assistant to the president on campus climate.

According to Leo Davila, A.S. president, the Student Union is paid for by the students who matriculate through the university; the naming process should be left up to them.

The proposal for the referendum was heard Feb. 23 at the A.S. Board of Directors meeting.

"We felt it was important to have student say," said Corina Herrera, co-chair of MEChA.

On Monday, the naming movement was followed by a discussion by the A.S. board meeting, and a resolution, or referendum, was proposed.

Even if the referendum is passed by the students, the naming of all university buildings must go through a process, which includes passing through a naming committee.

Reyes said student representation on the naming committee is recommended but not needed.

"The naming committee, like any committee, takes everyone's input into consideration," said Reyes.

"I would say legally it (the student vote) has no impact, but politically it has a big impact," Davila said.

Herrera told the board the resolution should not be passed.

She said MEChA had been misinformed about the route the group should have taken to change the name of the Student Union.

In 1998, the Latino Community Advisory Council of San Jose petitioned SJSU to name a building after Chavez.

The late Chavez was an advocate for migrant farm workers' rights.

He led quiet protests in California and other southwestern states to bring attention to the mistreatment of farm laborers, the majority of which were Latino.

The request was taken into consideration by the university, and a room in Washington Square Hall was selected to bear the name, according to Reyes.

The room in Washington Square Hall was considered too small by the council, and they requested another structure or building be named after Chavez.

Miss Vietnamese event a full house

Monica L. Ewing
DAILY STAFF WRITER

A crowd of 1,060 people filled all the seats and stood in the back of the Morris Dailey Auditorium Saturday night to watch the Miss Vietnamese Inter-Colleges of Northern California competition.

The SJSU Vietnamese Student Association's pageant was one of the biggest events they have ever put on, said Tho Nguyen, co-emcee of the pageant.

The event was so popular, some people waiting to buy tickets at the door were turned away.

The night was full of singing, dancing, fashion shows and comedy along with the traditional parading of the contestants.

Except when non-Vietnamese speaking guests were introduced to the crowd, the entire production was in Vietnamese.

The show's first number featured men and women in traditional costume, singing and dancing to a Vietnamese song.

A brightly colored cardboard dragon sprawled across the stage and the backdrop featured another dragon.

That was followed by a number with women in wrap skirts and leis wiggling their hips to the beat of "Kokomo" by the Beach Boys while three men danced near a thatched hut in the back and pretended to play guitars.

The evening went on in much the same fashion, intermingling numbers with traditional songs and costume with performances that embraced more mainstream apparel and music.

By presenting cultural as well as modern ideas, the organizers wanted to appeal to the younger generations born in the United States and the older generations from Vietnam, said Thao Nguyen, co-emcee of the pageant.

The event was part of an ongoing celebration of the Year of the Dragon and was intended to unite the Vietnamese people from all the area colleges with each other, said Nick Truong, the director of the pageant, who has been putting on these shows for 11 years.

Three main purposes were behind Saturday's event, according to Thao Nguyen, who is also a student at SJSU.

Protesters huddled under their umbrellas for a short-lived candlelight vigil Thursday in front of San Jose's City Hall.

Students from Lincoln High School organized the vigil so citizens could voice their concerns about Proposition 21, a state initiative that would increase punishment for juveniles who commit gang-related felonies.

The proposition has already been highly debated and an unusual number of high school students have held protests.

"Youth need to be educated, not incarcerated," said Lizzie Cohen, a youth organizer with Students for Justice. "We want schools and not jails in this state."

The increased punishments would be for gang-related felonies, such as home invasions, carjacking, witness intimidation and drive-by shootings, as described by Santa Clara County's sample ballot.

It would also make gang recruitment activities a crime.

If the proposition is passed, prosecutors would be able to decide which juveniles get tried as adults and confidentiality protections for juvenile suspects could be lessened.

County Supervisor Jim Bell said the County Board of Supervisors is recommending people to vote no on the proposition.

Bell cited the Pelican Bay state prison riot, which has been covered heavily in the news lately, as a reason juveniles should not be tried as adults.

"California has the largest and deadliest prison system in the United States," Bell said. "Do we really want to put our children in state county facilities? My answer is no."

He also said most local politicians are against the proposition but that 35 percent of the voting population is undecided.

"We've got to get the word out that this is a very punitive measure for our youth," Bell said.

Bell also said the proposition would make the three-strikes law more brutal and that it would take $1 billion to lock up the extra youths, who could be prosecuted under Prop. 21.

Reed pushes enrollment

Erika Coron
DAILY SENIOR STAFF WRITER

Expanding enrollment will be one of the priorities for the California State University budget.

CSU Chancellor Charles Reed said in a phone interview Thursday he would like to see $85 million go toward funding access and expanding enrollment.

"This is going to be a big budget season," Reed said after returning from a visit to Sacramento.

Reed said $21 million dollars has been set aside for improvements to libraries, technology, and maintenance and repairs to facilities.

"I think trying to expand enrollment is wonderful, but if your going to spend $85 million on this and only $21 million on improving what we have — it seems skewed," San Jose State University graduate student Paul Kunkel said.

If more funds went into improving universities, new students would be drawn in and more facilities would be available to them, Kunkel said.

"We're putting the horse before the cart — which I think is rather silly," said Kunkel, who thought

Proposed flag ban promotes discrimination

Discrimination is ugly. It divides. It offends. It places barriers that time can not even tear down.

On Feb. 17 the San Jose State University Academic Senate voted — unanimously — to recommend the flags of three states not be flown during graduation ceremonies this spring.

The flags of Georgia, South Carolina and Mississippi were targeted because each one contains the Confederate "Stars and Bars" in its design.

The Confederate flag was flown by southern states that seceded during the Civil War. It has been viewed as an enduring symbol of slavery.

Is the Confederate flag a symbol of discrimination?

Yes.

Is banning the flags of these states for a university graduation ceremony the proper way to respond to the message these flags might bring?

No.

By calling for a ban of these flags, the academic senate is in effect calling for a protest against discrimination by advocating discrimination.

Page 30 of the spring 2000 schedule under students rights states, "SJSU does not discriminate on the basis of race, color, religion, national origin, sex, sexual orientation, marital status, pregnancy, age disability, disabled veteran's or Vietnam veteran's status. This policy applies to all SJSU student, faculty and staff programs and activities."

We suppose discrimination based on state residence is all right, however.

Did the Academic Senate take into account students who might be from either Georgia, South Carolina or Mississippi?

Probably not.

We do not condone the racial discrimination the Confederate flag implies or anything to do with slavery and oppression. We realize the scars of racial discrimination run deep.

Yet, two wrongs do not make a right.

The academic senate recommendation was well-intentioned, but it has missed the mark.

Instead of condemning the SJSU students who might be from those states — we think the academic senate should use its energy to organize protests against decision-makers of Georgia, South Carolina and Mississippi.

They could initiate petitions to the governors, or they could organize rallies against flying the Confederate flag.

They should not punish Georgian, South Carolinian or Mississippian students though.

Life defined better by hobbies than occupation

"What do you do?" This question can barely be heard above the thumping music at almost any night club, or through the din of guests at a pool party, or during a handshake at any social gathering where people who don't already know each other are attempting to meet.

Almost always, the answer is, "Well, I am a (fill in job title here) at (fill in organization name here)."

This writer is guilty of replying in such a manner.

Answering "What do you do?" by stating one's employer is a very telling event, even more telling, I would argue, than the actual answer may be.

It reveals something about the values of the person answering the query.

Attaching one's self to a job or career that one is proud of is common. People can work very hard to get where they are in their working lives and are proud of their positions at whatever company or organization that employs them.

Ask any college grad what sacrifices they had to endure or what long hours they had to put in driving to and from school, how little time they had for their loved ones or what sporting events they missed during their time in college, and most will surely ramble a list of hurdles they had to jump to get their degree.

Fine.

Now I want everyone to take an inventory of the things they are passionate about and put them on their mental notepads.

Are you into Latin dance? Snowboarding? Parcheesi?

While at work, do you count the minutes until the end of your shift, or relish each second at the office, mill or job site?

Filling space: the challenge of a columnist

When the semester started, I wasn't going to return to this box. I had said my peace the previous semester, and I didn't want a heavy workload.

But, after pressure from the Spartan Daily's powers that be, I am here to fill this space. "You're a good columnist," they said. As if I believed them.

I hear that comment a lot now, along with "I like your column," and every other compliment I really could care less about. I miss running on Fridays, when no one read the crap I put out.

Now I'm complimented at the vending machine, the Marketplace Cafe, on the way to get a diet cola at the Event Center ...

Great, now I have a fan base to satisfy. I can't satisfy myself, you think I'll satisfy all of you?

Now my other nightmare has come to light. No idea to write about. No point. No lead in the pencil, er, no idea to write with a leadless pencil.

No, my brain hasn't been turned into mush from stupid video games such as "The Sims" or "Unreal Tournament." Nor have I been diluted by other responsibilities, like classes, editing, girlfriend, staying alive, trying not to sing any lyrics from the Bee Gees after that mention.

But I'm dry in the head. Nothing's standing out that hasn't been said before by our staff — like our infamous Bradley Smith advertisement and two columns on why circumcisions prevent men from having the joy of smegma production — and I can't think clear enough to talk about something else.

D.S. Perez

BORN UNDER A BAD SIGN

It's related to something I've been suffering from the last couple of weeks: the feeling of being powerless, of being unable to do anything. I've had the feeling of inferiority all my life. I do everything badly — tying my shoes, speaking, conveying emotion — except for writing. But good writers are a dime a dozen. I know I'm not long for this business of egos.

I pray that someone learned something from our beautiful Thursday issue on the Holocaust. I learned about the evils of the Nazis from not knowing what a cool-looking red and white flag with four black hooks stood for. Hey, I was only a seven-year-old when I saw "Raiders of the Lost Ark," and I always cheered for the bad guys in movies.

The kicker in my learning about the Holocaust was not from survivors I interviewed but from a German guy my father knew in the Air Force. He was a teen-ager who was forced to fight for the Reich in its last months of existence, and spoke about what the ultra-strict government he lived under was like, and once mentioned the large ovens and trainloads of undesirables — Jews, gypsies, the handicapped and such.

To have someone from that side admit to something was enough for me to be convinced. But the Holocaust and all of the resulting stories — even the ones at the Daily — are better spoken, or written, by other voices aside from mine.

I could tell you about pork being used in place of veal at a local posh eatery, but no. I'm more amused at the shock from those who have certain religious diets and disgusted at animal-rights zealots who use it as an item for their agendas when it's just a restaurant ripping off the customers.

Besides, I love pork. But if I stretched that into paragraphs of readable column, would it captivate your MTV-shortened interests? No.

I could describe the shock and disgust I had when I found out that a local school didn't have a map in the classroom. Kids didn't even know where Russia — that really big, horizontal country near the top of the map or globe, for all of you geography-illiterates — was.

Maybe I was shocked because I was in a National Geographic geography bee. I have a map of the world above my bed and I wanted to sail under the Seven Seas in a submarine years ago. Hell, my Los Angeles-area junior high school was better equipped than this one in the heart of the highly advanced Silicon Valley. Or, because I happen to be half Russian.

I doubt I could b.s. my way through paragraphs on geography though. It's sad for me to say this, but like history, most people don't give a rat's rump about geography. Most would think the Great Nefud was Elmer Fudd's magic act in a Looney Toons skit, not the dunes of Arabia. But hey, ignorance of the world is bliss.

Sigh. Seven-hundred and sixty-five words written so far. I sometimes wonder what would be put here, if I wasn't typing this drivel up.

Probably another bad columnist.

Black History Month inspires island born

Growing up in Hawaii, the most significant African-American figures I knew of were primarily pro athletes and entertainers.

Born and raised in the islands, where there were few blacks, I lacked knowledge of the history of my own culture.

It wasn't until I was 12 years old that I began to learn more about the accomplishments of blacks in different professions. During a sixth-grade class presentation honoring Black History Month, I was introduced to individuals like Langston Hughes and Thurgood Marshall. I also learned more about the lives and philosophies of Martin Luther King, Jr. and Malcolm X.

Looking back on the experience, I realize the impact of the monthly celebration had on expanding my knowledge of black history. It gave me an identity as a young black person capable of success in many different avenues. It also gave me the confidence I needed to pursue my dreams of becoming a journalist.

Black History Month has always been a time to recognize accomplished blacks in society. I believe the focus should primarily be on educating the nation's youth about the many great African-American figures in history.

The KRON-TV Web site defines the month as a time "we bear witness to the progress, richness, and diversity of African-American achievement."

The word "diversity" stood out in my mind because it implies a spectrum of people and vocations.

Almost every time I think of celebrating black history, I think of accomplishments of Hughes, the great African-American poet and Frederick Douglass, another famous African-American literary figure.

But, talking with many children today, a majority of them mention athletes and entertainers as their idols. It seems they have lost sight of the many other possibilities. They often talk about one day playing professionally or making a record deal — what about becoming a doctor, lawyer, reporter or politician?

Marcus R. Fuller

Celebrities such as Michael Jordan, Tiger Woods, Puff Daddy and Snoop Dog are inspiring kids to become great athletes and rap artists.

There's nothing wrong with wanting to become the next Jordan or Tupac. However, the richness of African-American achievement is not limited to the court, field or recording studio.

The media publicizes a great deal of sports and music on television, in newspapers, magazines and on the Internet.

In these articles and telecasts, the performances of many black athletes and entertainers are shown more than any other ethnicity.

Since young people watch more Sportscenter and MTV than anything, they subconsciously believe that they can only pursue careers in sports and music.

Granted children are going to watch sports and rap videos regardless. However, school's can supplement the influence of the media with inspiring books and material on black history.

The educating of youth about the diverse accomplishments of blacks in society should be done not only during Black History Month but throughout the year. It will give children opportunity to explore new careers in which they can use their many gifts and talents to be successful.

Coverage of Proposition 22 rally bias

Let me get this straight: A small group of gay students, obviously opposed to Proposition 22, held a rally. Fewer than a dozen people were in the audience.

Yet, somehow the Spartan Daily found this "event" newsworthy enough to write a front page story about, complete with a picture ("Gays dispute Knight," Feb. 25.).

There was not even a token quote from the opposition in the completely one-sided article.

One has to wonder that if a conservative group held a "Yes on 22" rally, would the Spartan Daily cover it even if twice as many people showed up?

Even very liberal students must acknowledge the workers at the Spartan Daily are not trying to objectively cover the news, but are actively trying to influence opinions and votes.

Based on this, and other "headlines" I have read during my two years at San Jose State, I conclude the Spartan Daily should be renamed the Propaganda Daily.

Thank God I graduate when this semester is over.

Internet use both social and anti-social

This is a reply to the recent editorial on the Internet being either social or anti-social. I may be acting like "Mr. Duh" in the "Non Sequitur" comic strip, but my viewpoint falls in between the social and anti-social viewpoints. The Internet is anti-social from a personal standpoint but it's definitely social otherwise.

Students check their personal e-mail and chat online, which is definitely anti-social in regard to communicating face-to-face.

However, for those individuals who think the Internet is completely anti-social, you are half right. E-mail is important for people who want to communicate with another person living 60 miles away. I come to class three days a week, and I only have time between 9 a.m. to noon, 2 p.m. to 4 p.m. to meet with anyone in San Jose. Students also need the Internet to do some of their research for paper projects and presentations. To get more information from companies, e-mail and submitting online forms is social interaction between the student and the companies.

Face-to-face communication is the only way to understand a person's true feelings. However, the Internet is a critical communication portal if it affects a class grade or being 60 miles away from the person you wish to communicate with.

Tennis team ached by rain

SJSU serves blanks in 6-0 loss to UNLV

Michelle Jew
DAILY STAFF WRITER

Looking down at players wearing short sleeved shirts and wind-breaker pants in the drizzling rain, young Sierra Nguyen pulled a fleece sweatshirt over her head and shivered before jumping up and down on the bench.

"It's raining, it's pouring, the old man is snoring," the coach's daughter said, stopping and looking at the people around her. "It's cold!"

"We can go back in the lounge," her cousin Channel said.

"I don't wanna go back in," Sierra said.

After an hour of play in the wind and sometimes sprinkling rain on Thursday against UNLV, the San Jose State University women's tennis team was called into the Los Gatos Racquet Club lounge for a rain delay.

Sierra and her cousin Channel jumped off the bench, giggled and sprinted to the lounge before any of the players could make it off the courts.

Inside, players sat at tables, drank hot chocolate, ate bananas and waited to find out if they would continue to play.

Assistant coach Marcus Bately wandered between the lounge and another room trying to figure out whether or not the courts would be dry enough to play on.

"Overall we're not doing very well, mostly because of the weather," head coach Anh-Dao Nguyen said. "The players never had a chance to settle down and find their rhythm."

SJSU's No. 1 ranked player, Anna Nordell lost 6-0, 6-0, to Katarzyna Malec, Marta Zivanov lost 6-3, 6-2 to Leonica Goude and Vanessa Pinot lost 6-2, 6-1 to Amela Hadeiosmovic before the rain delay.

"UNLV is a strong team," Nguyen said. "Their No. 1 player is top, she's really good, but their 2-6 players are really solid; there's almost no difference. They're a tough team to play."

The double matches for the day were canceled by SJSU.

"We could have played doubles," the coach said, "but I thought our girls could use a break."

After playing hard over the weekend, the Spartans came back this week to complications.

"Our No. 3 player got really sick today, so she didn't play,"

Lexey Swall / Spartan Daily

San Jose State University's No. 2 seeded singles tennis player, Marta Zivanov, hits a ball back to her Nevada-Las Vegas opponent a during a match Thursday at the Los Gatos Racquet Club. Zivanov lost to UNLV's Leonica Goude 6-3, 6-2 before rain delayed the Spartans' match with the Rebels. The Spartans lost the match 6-0 as doubles play was canceled due to weather conditions.

Nguyen said, "Then our No. 5 player pulled her hamstring during warm-up. I think it was due to the cold. She just couldn't get her legs warm enough. Then she went for a ball and pulled it."

After an hour of sitting in the club lounge waiting and playing with Sierra and Channel, the players got word that two of the six courts were dry enough to play on.

With both teams watching and calling encouragement, one singles set between Helen Van and Michaela Gabl was completed, cinching the Spartan loss of 6-0.

The price of playing so much in so little time took its toll on the team.

"I think the team was exhausted from the weekend. Then because of the rain we didn't practice on Monday or Tuesday,"

Nguyen said, referring to the Northern Arizona Invitational Tournament.

"We hit a little on Wednesday, but it was indoors and there is a big difference between being indoors and being outside in the rain," she said.

Women lose again

The women's basketball could find no relief in the island state Saturday.

The Spartans (2-22, 0-12 in WAC) remained winless in Western Athletic Conference play with a 69-42 loss at the hands of Hawaii.

The loss added another notch on their 17-game losing streak, which includes a 0-12 mark in WAC play.

Guard Natasha Johnson led the San Jose State University women with 13 points while Bernadette Suffle grabbed 10 rebounds for the Spartans. Megan Gluhan also pitched in five points and five assists.

Hawaii led by as many as 30 points behind a scoring attack that saw four players post double figures. Crystal Lee led the Rainbow Wahine with 13 as they improved to 18-7 overall and 10-3 in the WAC.

The Spartan women will conclude their season with a two-game homestand this week against Texas-El Paso and Fresno State. The Miners visit SJSU's Event Center Tuesday with a tipoff time of 5:30 p.m.

Swimmers take fifth; Morales honored

Pablo Morales was named Western Athletic Conference Coach of the Year as the Spartans finished fifth at the WAC Championships Sunday.

Morales, in his second year as the head of SJSU's swimming program, was voted the conference's top coach by his fellow WAC coaches.

The Spartans finished with an overall total of 384 in the four-day competition held in San Antonio.

Southern Methodist successfully defended its title, with a 886.5 total to beat out Hawaii's 675.5 and Rice's 582.5.

Katina Maistrellis of SMU won Swimmer of the Year.

SJSU's Charlotte Pierce was named to the all-conference team after finishing second in the 100- and 200-yard butterfly.

In the 1650-yard freestyle Petra Banovic finished in third for the Spartans.

In the 200 butterfly Gretchen Cook finished eighth while Kiley Reinke finished tenth in the 200-yard breaststroke.

The Spartans broke nine school records throughout the competition.

Five of the record-shattering performances came Saturday including Gretchen Cook, who broke her own record in the 400-yard individual medley.

Banovic also set a new SJSU record in the 200-yard freestyle with a time of 1:50.37.

The Spartans set new records in the 200-yard medley and 800-yard freestyle relays.

In the 100-yard breaststroke Reinke finished eighth with teammate Lori Turner right behind in ninth.

In the first day of action, diver Kelley Lasich finished fifth in the 1-meter diving competition. Lasich posted a 375.40, which proved to be a season-high.

Dunking over the Rainbow

Spartans find pot of gold in 67-50 win over Hawai'i

Marcus R. Fuller
DAILY STAFF WRITER

A cloud of rain came showering into San Jose Saturday in the form of the Hawai'i men's basketball team.

Unfortunately for Hawai'i, San Jose State University created a defensive storm of its own in defeating the Rainbows 67-50 in front of a crowd of 1,522 at the Event Center.

With the victory, the Spartans improve to 14-13 overall and are tied for fifth in the Western Athletic Conference with Hawai'i at 5-7. The Rainbows fell to 16-10 overall.

Head coach Steve Barnes said the Spartans had one of their best defensive performances of the season, limiting the Bows to 19 first half points and 50 for the game. The Rainbows were held 20 points below their season average, and it was the eighth time this season the Spartans held a team below

"Of their seven field goals in the first half, about three of them were from offensive rebounds, so you're only looking at four baskets from their offense," Barnes said.

"When my guys decide they really want to think the game out — play as hard as they can play and really concentrate — they're as good a defensive team as anybody."

SJSU's defensive game plan was to shut down the Rainbow's scoring leader Marquette Alexander. The 6-foot-9-inch forward scorched the Spartans for 20 points and 10 rebounds in a 84-74 victory at Hawai'i on Jan. 28.

The Spartans were able to hold Alexander to seven points and 3-of-9 shooting from the field, with the help of senior Eric Griffin.

"He likes to shoot the ball, so when he went to dribble, we doubled him and tried to make him kick it out," Griffin said.

Even though he outscored and outrebounded Alexander with nine points and nine boards, the 6-foot-7 forward from San Jose insisted that he benefited from the help of his teammates.

"Kevin Blunt also came in and really worked hard against him," Griffin said. "He limited his touches and forced them to shoot 3's and not look down low for their offense."

Leading a balanced Spartan scoring attack were Billy Landram and Cory Powell with 13 points each. R.J. Powell also contributed 11 points and six assists.

While it was evident from the outset that SJSU's game plan was to set the tone with intense defensive pressure, the Spartans began the contest with a statement offensively.

Three minutes into the game, before Hawai'i even had time to breathe, the Spartans sprinted out to an 11-2 lead.

After a 7-2 Hawai'i run, capped off by a three-point basket from Pedrag Savovic, the Spartans saw their lead dwindle to four points.

The Rainbows would not get any closer, however, as SJSU ended the first half with a 22-10 run to enter the locker room with 35-19 lead.

Hawai'i shot a dismal 24 percent from the field in the first half to SJSU's 48 percent.

For SJSU, it was the second consecutive game with a halftime lead. However, since the Spartans have not been ahead at the half too many times this season, Barnes said the team must not become complacent.

"We haven't been up very many times at halftime, so we talked to them about not being too loose," Barnes said.

SJSU showed glimpses of the Tulsa game last week in which they dropped their intensity in the second half.

Early in the second, Hawai'i went on a 10-0 run to narrow the Spartans lead to 41-31 with 13 minutes remaining in the half.

The Spartans answered with a powerful dunk by Blunt to extend the lead back to 12 points.

Minutes later SJSU's Darnell Williams left the game with his fourth foul after hacking Troy Olster. Olster then made two free throws, giving the momentum back to Hawai'i.

The Rainbows quickly capitalized with a steal and dunk by Jeremy Robinson to cut the lead to 45-38 with 10:51 left in the game.

After a timeout, the Spartans then went on a 13-5 run, highlighted by a Landram three-point basket and a slam from Cory Powell to pull ahead 60-43.

Hawai'i guard Mike McIntyre, who led the Rainbows with 11 points, hit three straight baskets, including two three-pointers, to cut the lead to 10 points with 4:24 remaining.

Nevertheless, the previous Spartan surge proved to be too much for Hawai'i to handle, as SJSU posted a 16-point victory in its last home game this season.

For seniors, Griffin, Powell and Ben Sanders, it was the last home game of their career.

In the final minute of the contest, Barnes pulled the seniors out to give the Spartan fans a chance to show their appreciation.

"It was great to get the support from the fans," Griffin said. "It really wasn't to big for me because our season is still going and this wasn't my last game."

The Spartans will be on the road in their next game on Wednesday at 7 p.m. against Fresno State.

Tough weekend on diamond for Spartan squads

Staff report

The Spartan softball team dropped to 4-6 after a doubleheader sweep at the hands of Sacramento State.

In the first game of Saturday's games at Shea Stadium, the Hornets jumped to a quick 4-0 lead after a three-run third inning.

The San Jose State University team answered with a run in both the fourth and fifth frames, but a two-run sixth knotted the game at four.

In the bottom of the seventh, the Hornets' Maureen Whitney broke the tie and gave the Sacramento State the win with a two-out RBI single.

Kirsten Foster hammered a homer as one of her two hits to lead the Spartans at the plate.

In the second game, the Hornets pulled out another close victory, 2-1.

The baseball team couldn't muster a win over the weekend either.

In their Western Athletic Conference opener Saturday at Municipal Stadium, the Spartans fell to Hawai'i-Hilo 5-2.

The Vulcans broke a 1-1 tie with a four-run sixth inning, and the Spartans never recovered.

Sunday, the second game of the three-game series was postponed due to rain.

The game is scheduled to be made up a part of a doubleheader today at 3 p.m.

Diallo juror comes forward

ALBANY, N.Y. (AP) — A member of the jury that acquitted four white police officers in the killing of Amadou Diallo said Sunday that the outcome was "not happy, but clear."

Speaking publicly for the first time since Friday's verdict in the racially charged case, juror Helen Harder said the jury deliberated without discord before agreeing the law was on the side of the officers.

"It turned out the only way it could turn out," Harder, 71, told The Associated Press. She also said that the facts of the case "were very clear — not happy, but clear."

Harder — who has nine children and 17 grandchildren — described the heartbreak of seeing Diallo's parents sitting in the front row each day of the month-long trial.

"I know the cops are happy. None of (the jurors) are very happy," she said. "But that's the way it worked out."

Because of pretrial publicity, an appeals court moved the murder case to Albany, where Harder, who is white, served on a jury that also had four black women and seven white men. She didn't discuss race, but her husband, attorney George Harder, said his wife told him that race was not an issue in the jury's deliberations.

Officers Sean Carroll, Edward McMellon, Kenneth Boss and Richard Murphy were cleared of second-degree murder and other charges in the slaying of Diallo, a West African immigrant.

The plainclothes officers claimed they fired 41 bullets at the victim on Feb. 4, 1999, after he refused orders to halt for questioning and pulled out a black object they thought was a handgun. Diallo was hit 19 times in the vestibule of his Bronx apartment before the defendants realized the object was a wallet.

Jurors have mostly remained silent since the verdict, despite constant hounding by news organizations. Harder and juror Thomas Knowles said several jurors were meeting to consider issuing a joint statement.

The jury's black foreperson, Arlene Taylor, who once lived in the Bronx, said in Sunday's New York Post that the three-day deliberation had "nothing to do with race."

The defense case hinged on the emotional testimony of the officers. All said they felt they had to shoot Diallo in self-defense.

"I thought they were quite believable," Harder said of their testimony.

The judge instructed jurors several times that by law if they concluded that the officers "reasonably believed" Diallo was armed and dangerous, they must acquit.

the extra money would be better spent on expanding the core classes being offered so current students can get their degrees sooner.

"I don't want more students coming here because we are already overcrowded," computer engineering student Khanh Doan said about increasing enrollment. "It's kind of hard to enroll for courses because of too many students and not enough courses to offer."

About 85 percent of the $85 million, roughly $72.25 million, is going into hiring more faculty for student access, to accommodate new students.

The other 15 percent will go into student services and academic development, according to Reed.

"I'm glad that they're putting so much effort into getting new students, but I think they could have put more money into doing maintenance and things like that," graduate student Archana Raman said.

Raman said the numbers should be reversed — putting more effort into improving the quality of the system rather than getting new students.

Library improvements are long overdue according to Raman, who has to go to the Stanford library to do the research she can't do at SJSU due to the lack of sufficient technical journals.

"The other thing that we're asking for is a fair compensation package for all of our employees," Reed said.

A pool of 5 percent of the budget was recommended by the governor to be used with different organizations for the compensation package, Reed said.

He added that he thought they would be met with success.

Those were the main items in the budget, which was presented in Sacramento last week.

In May, the CSU Board of Trustees will get another opportunity to augment the budget.

The trustees have been spending large amounts of time focusing on the technological field — to facilitate and accelerate access to equipment, Reed said.

In addition, graduation requirements will be under closer scrutiny this year, according to Reed.

The Alliance against Police Brutality also showed up to protest the proposition.

"It's affecting people who can't vote," said Leslie DeBartolo with Students for Justice. "It's making choices for people who don't have a voice."

That seemed to be the reason so many youth showed up for the protest and have been voicing their objections to the proposition.

"I think a lot of youth were motivated because it's rare that a proposition affects them."

A group of teachers, lawyers and youth advocates were arrested for blocking the doors to the Oakland Police Department while protesting Prop. 21 on Feb. 21.

Gov. Gray Davis supports the proposition because even though overall juvenile crime has decreased since 1984, violent juvenile crime has increased 60 percent over the same time period.

Opponents of the proposition say it will take money away from schools while giving more to the justice system.

Amina Jahi, president of the San Jose chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said the initiative is racist.

"It is unfair to people of color," Jahi said. "We cannot allow the juvenile justice system to raise our children."

Representatives with the California Youth Connection and

The Chicano Library Resource Center was chosen to assume the name.

MEChA then made a move to have the Student Union bear the name, instead of the center, because the group felt as though Chavez's name should be on something more noticeable, according to Hererra. Changing the name of a building on campus is no easy feat.

A process to change the name of a San Jose State building has specific steps, Reyes said.

First, a request must be submitted to the president's office.

The request is brought before the executive committee of the Academic Senate.

After that, the naming committee is constituted, and decides the name of the building called into question.

The naming committee for the Student Union has not been formed.
